

Application Information

Ogden Food Council

The Ogden Food Council (OFC) is a volunteer body that aims to serve as a public forum for discussing food issues, fostering collaboration between different sectors of the food system, evaluating and influencing policies, and increasing community knowledge about food issues. This includes identifying opportunities for:

- Improving access to healthy, affordable, and culturally appropriate food for all Ogden residents
- Strengthening Ogden's food economy by supporting local farmers, food workers, and food entrepreneurs
- Addressing food waste throughout the community

The Ogden Food Council is made up of diverse individuals who represent sectors of the food system, including but not limited to agriculture, distribution, retail, consumption, access, and nutrition. Council members meet to work on system-level changes needed to reach a population result. Learn more about the Council here: www.ogdenfoodcouncil.org
